

Have You Left Your Joy Behind?

Description

I'm nervous!

You see I'm performing tonight for the first time in 10-years! Back in the day, I played my guitar and sang out in coffee shops, restaurants and small clubs a lot. And I loved it.

grease found or type unknown

I'm in the leather jacket, looking all Kinicki-like!

Music brings me joy. Or I suppose it's more accurate to say that music awakens the joy that is already in me. I began playing guitar when I was 6 and have played on and off ever since – Wow, that's 40-years! I performed in musicals starting out as the Captain of the Pinafore in 6th grade and ending with perhaps my crowning achievement, my role as Kinicki in Grease in a community theater performance... You know "Go greased lightnin' rollin' on down the line!"

(And as an interesting side note, I recently learned – through Facebook of course – that Dane Cook, the apparently somewhat famous comedian, was in the show. Is it bad that I didn't know who Dane Cook was until I looked him up?)

But, as much as I love music, it's interesting that it has always come and gone. I'll play for a few years and then drop it. Play again for a while and then drop it.

And that's just what happened about 10-years ago: Somewhere along the way, in between moving away from my musical "comfort zone" (where I knew all of the venue owners and could perform whenever I wanted) getting married, "settling down" and having a child, the performing dropped out of my life. I continued to play at home and invite friends over to jam for a while. But eventually even that stopped, and, for quite a few years, my guitar sat in its case, in a closet, untouched.

Why?

Playing music is something that brings me massive joy and lets that joy spread out into the world.

So why did I let it go? Why did I say "no" to my joy?

Well, as with any complex life experience there are number of factors. But at the very deepest level, I think it comes down to a core – and mostly unconscious – belief that I don't deserve that much joy! I know it sounds sort of dramatic, but when I play music the joy can be almost overwhelming. And it lights up and activates any of the old, wounded places inside of me that have not been healed.

And my guess is that when I've chosen to move music to the back burner it's because the places inside me that felt I didn't deserve such joy were stronger than the parts of me that wanted that joy. My wounds won!

Now, it's very interesting that for the past 3-days I have pulled the Hummingbird Medicine Card. And I shuffled the deck really well each day!

According to Jamie Sams – the creator of the Medicine Cards – Hummingbird is all about Joy! She writes.

"If Hummingbird is your personal medicine, you love life and its joys. Your presence brings joy to others. You join people in relationships which bring out the best in them... You move comfortably within a beautiful environment and help others taste the succulent nectar of life."

That's it. That's exactly what I do when I'm playing music.

Does the fact that Hummingbird has flown into my cards for the past 3-days mean that I'm done leaving that part of me behind? Does it mean that I'm ready to reclaim my joy and my ability to fully share that joy with others?

We'll see!

And what about you? Have you left some of your joy behind? Is there something you used to do that opened you to the flow of joy and allowed you to share joy with others?

What is it? Where has it gone?

Whatever "reason" you have for no longer doing it, get over it!

For the past 10-years, my "reason" for not playing music was my family. I felt the pressure to be "responsible" and, as my father used to say, to "Do the right thing." And a part of me believed that being responsible meant giving up the things that bring me joy.

D'oh!

How could I ever be truly responsible for my family when I have turned my back to joy? How could I ever hope to model TRUE Abundance to my daughter if I'm not willing to embrace and share my joy with her and with others?

Sharing what you love, sharing the song in your heart – whether it's music or art or healing or whatever – is one of the most challenging things you can ever do. But until you are willing to say YES to your joy and to the things that bring you joy and to the joy YOU BRING to the world, TRUE Abundance will continue to elude you.

You may have lots of money, but that money will be empty, for your heart will be closed to the true nature of this life, which is JOY!

So take some time to consider what you have left behind. And when you find it, take a baby step today to start bringing it back into your life!

If you feel like sharing, send me an email, or leave a comment over at the Evolving Times blog.

Oh, and the next time you hear a hummingbird, remember this, from the Medicine Cards:

“Follow sister Hummingbird and you will soon be filled with paroxysms of joy and experience a renewal of the magic of living.”

I have no idea what “Paroxysms” are but they sound pretty frickin’ good to me! I’ll take it!

Your partner in TRUE Abundance

Edward

PS. If you're in the North Bay and want to come share in some of the joy tonight (Saturday) I'll be performing at Infusions Tea Shop in Sebastopol from 7:00 – 9:00.

PPS. I'm getting ready to launch a new training course – The Money System Upgrade – later this month. But before I launch the group program, I'm going to work with a handful of private clients and take them through the Money Upgrade System, one-on-one, at an introductory price. If you're interested in working with me and having me upgrade your Personal Energy Systems so they are aligned with TRUE Abundance, go check out the details here.

Category

1. Personal Development
2. TRUE Abundance

Tags

1. Joy
2. life lessons
3. music
4. Personal Growth

Date Created

2010/10/02

Author

mikayalaja_ccfz7c